Chapter 1 by Rahul

"Hey, Jake! It's a beautiful night, wanna step outside with the telescope? We may catch the meteor shower too!"

Jake didn't turn his head, or even blink.

"Come on Jake, you can play whatever that is in a little while. Trust me, you don't want to miss this!"

"Dad, I can't leave right now, my team needs me. We're almost at the checkpoint, gimme 5 minutes okay?"

"Alright son, I'll set stuff up out back in the meantime."

5 minutes later, Jake joined his father outside, clutching his PSP just in case things got too boring.

"So tonight, the Perseid meteor shower is supposed to be a real show. I used to love watching 'em when I was your age." said Jake's Dad.

"Uh huh ... " said Jake. Then suddenly, something caught his attention in the sky.

"Hey dad, uh-huh... what's that? It looks like it's getting big really fast. Is that a meteor or something?" asked Jake.

Jake's dad carefully aimed the telescope at the peculiar object, and nearly felt the Earth slip away beneath his feet. It was enormous, at least a mile wide. It had bright flashing lights on both tips, and he could see what looked like giant, glass, windows! It was probably only 50 km above them now, approaching fast but appeared to be slowing down.

"It's ... it's ... it's landing. This can't be, there's no way. Jake, quick, get in the house now!" whispered Jake's dad.

It was large enough in the sky now for Jake to see without a telescope. Without uttering a single word, he clutched his dad's hand, and ran for the door.

Chapter 2 by Joakim

As soon as the reached the house Jake shouted for his mom and sister to come downstairs. Jake's dad went for the phone immediately. He tried calling 911 but all lines were down. He was starting to panic.

Jake brought his mom and sister to the window, they gasped at the object which was now landing not that far away from their house.

Lise, Jake's mom, ushered them all to the back of the house.

"We have to hide in the woods! There is no knowing what that thing is", she said to them while grasping both Jake and his sister's hand hard.

Chapter 3 by Joakim

They barely reached the woods when the whole sky was lit up.

Chapter 4 by Joakim

With the sky lit up like that they could see the object clearly. It was the most beautiful thing they had ever seen. They decided to move into the lit up sky.

"Oh my god, it's more of those things, hundreds of them." Jake's dad whispered.

Chapter 5 by Mia

The air changed. Jake suddenly felt a deja vu. This was the feeling he have had while playing on his PSP. Fear, but a sudden rush of seeing things clearly. The smell thou were a stranger, thick and salty with a hint of something that made the throut tickle.

Jake turned his head to his father as his father fell to the ground. He heared himself scream just as his mom also fell to the ground. He continued screaming as his sister took his hand. "Jake, you can feel it. You have to be quite."

He understood what Hannah said, if he didn't keep quite. They would come...

Chapter 6 by Joakim

He did keep QUIET ( :P) but they still came. They must have heard him screaming. They continued deeper into the woods. It being so dark that they feel several times.

Chapter 7 by Danny Rerucha

Jake and Hannah stood up from the kitchen floor slowly after ensuring their parents were still breathing. They turned off the light, and peaked out the window facing their backyard, never daring to let more than their noses lift past the counter top. They couldn't see anything--their eyes had not yet adjusted to the recent darkness in the kitchen. They couldn't see anything, but they could hear the chains on their swingset rattling. One deep breath. Another. The darkness was starting to form into shapes now. Two more deep breaths. He could see the swingset, empty and still. Then the doorbell rang.

can do this, it's just like in my video games.' He figured it would be a good idea to have a weapon though, so he grabbed an umbrella from the table by the door and prepared himself for a fight. Whatever creature was on the other side had started banging on the door and trying to break it down. Jack backed up a couple of meters and stood with the sharp end of the umbrella pointed towards the doorway, waiting for the creature. Suddenly there was a loud crash as something broke through the door, but what Jack saw was nothing like what he expected and he dropped the umbrella and watched in awe and amazement. Standing in the doorway was.....
